Période d'enseignement:

- Semestre Automne

Equipe enseignante:

OSWALD, Steve

Objectifs:

This course aims to give a broad introduction to English phonetics and phonology, taking into account geographical and social contexts as well as recent developments.

The course will help students who need it to improve their English pronunciation. It will also provide a descriptive and practical background to the sounds and accents of English for those who go on to teach or study further.

Contenu:

The course covers basic theoretical aspects of speech production, and explores the phonological system of English, including suprasegmental phenomena such as features of connected speech, rhythm and intonation.

Phonemic transcription is practised, and accents of English are considered in the context of English as a world language.

Forme de l'évaluation:

A written test (100%) (date and time to be announced), plus assignments and phonemic transcriptions (requirement for continuous assessment).

Rattrapage by a written test (100%) (date and time to be announced: only possible if the regular test has already been attempted)

Documentation:

Documents and web links will be made available as the course progresses.

Pré-requis:

Before beginning this course, students need to have reached a level in English of at least B2 (Common European Framework), roughly the equivalent of the Cambridge First Certificate Examination.

Forme de l'enseignement:

A 1-hour lecture followed by a 1-hour practical workshop in two groups. Students sign up for one of the two groups.
