Contenu:

This master course will provide basic notions of the divide between semantics and pragmatics and address advanced topics in this area with a focus on cognitive processes of linguistic meaning retrieval. We will investigate how linguistic forms trigger meaningful contents for interlocutors, and what belongs to the linguistic form itself and what relies on the cognitive mechanisms of interpretation. After drawing a global picture of the issue and providing some basic tools of analysis, we will dwell into the big classical problems and topics concerning the divide between semantics and pragmatics, that is, between code and cognitive inference. Among these topics, we will pay attention to quantification, implicit meanings, temporal relations, subjectivity and modality. If time allows, we will also hint at problems related to discourse and persuasion.
