Contenu

The course will start with an overview of the field of political economy and in particular, with a discussion of how institutions shape policy decisions and of the functioning (and the origins) of modern states. Some basic "tools" of political economics are introduced. We then focus on political determinants of policy choices in modern democracies. Thus, we ask how electoral rules shape economic performances. We discuss the asymmetries of information and the conflict of interest between opportunistic politicians and the general public. And we examine under what conditions this conflict might be more easily resolved. The next part of the course will address the origins of modern democracies and institutional set-ups (i.e. constitutions) and their relevance for growth and development. Finally, we turn to the analysis of two topics of particular relevance for future policymakers and civil servants: the determination of trade and environmental policies from a political economy perspective.
