Contenu

Global corporate governance is the system by which global firms are directed and controlled. It describes the roles, rights and duties of the different stakeholders involved, such as the board, directors, auditors, and shareholders, and how they relate to each other. It also refers to how a firm is structured and how decisions are taken internally. Many governance models exist, from the traditional hierarchy to more innovative and flat models. However global corporate governance does not only refer to aspects of norms and structure, but also to ethical questions of transparency and accountability. Good governance describes indeed a system that takes a long-term and sustainable approach, which considers social and environmental externalities, while being free of corruption and fraud. Although these ethical questions are highly dependent on cultural references, many academic studies conclude that well governed companies perform better in commercial terms.

The course will focus on how global companies define their corporate governance policies to comply with international legal norms and improve their commercial performance, but also respond to ethical issues of transparency and accountability.
